the future is bright
Youth who have suffered trauma can become our future leaders.
Dear Friends,

As I celebrate my 28th year with UCAN, I can say with certainty that it has been one of our most challenging and our most thrilling. There is a vibrant sense of pride and anticipation emanating from our youth and staff as we unify many of our programs at our newly constructed North Lawndale campus in summer 2016.

There are many reasons why UCAN has seen this level of success and weathered the financial storms affecting many of our peers and partners:

- First and foremost, our diverse and dynamic board of directors has provided a clear strategic vision for UCAN to remain a leader in trauma-informed therapy and violence prevention programs.
- Secondly, we’ve widened our scope of support and secured roughly $2.6 million of our $38 million annual budget from private sources, individual gifts and special event revenue. This allows UCAN a true margin of excellence in programs and services, beyond the baseline of support we receive from government sources.
- Finally, we pride ourselves on providing the utmost level of transparency when building relationships in the Chicago community. We believe this honesty shines a positive light on our efforts, even when the social services industry has been the subject of intense scrutiny.

Internally, our staff members hear stories daily from our youth about how we supported them in overcoming obstacles and finding light at the end of the tunnel. It is our goal to share as many of these successes as possible; not only to prove a potential for change, but also to counter some of the negativity conveyed in the media and shape a sense of optimism in our communities.

We cannot ignore the fact that there is much work to be done, and our city has seen its fair share of setbacks. UCAN has found answers through innovative partnerships to develop community mapping initiatives, data sharing resources, and exciting new therapies to serve youth who have suffered trauma.

It may seem cliché, but the culture at UCAN is defined by a sense of hope for the future. I want to thank you for believing in the vision that youth who’ve suffered trauma can become our future leaders. You have ensured that the future of our agency and those we serve will be bright.

Sincerely,

Thomas C. Vanden Berk

UCAN programs: a

UCAN works primarily with youth in care of the state’s child welfare system and youth who have been removed from their homes for reasons of abuse or neglect. We also work with the families of these children to enhance the full spectrum of support. UCAN provides a continuum of care that enables youth to move from one program to another as their needs change, sparing them the transitions and gaps caused by moves through multiple agencies. All of our programs are united by a common clinical philosophy, which ensures that our approach to healing is cohesive and consistent.

HEALING TRAUMA

UCAN provides a core of counseling services and staff member support for families suffering separation, abuse and neglect. The nature, extent and impact of trauma are unique to each youth we serve. Abuse can be physical, sexual and/or emotional. Neglect is characterized by unmet physical and emotional needs.

- Therapeutic Residential Services

BUILDING STRONG FAMILIES

UCAN provides services and resources for foster care, teen parenting and family education. The goal is always to engage a young person’s immediate family members in these services and provide all parties with a high level of guidance and support during their difficult transitions and obstacles.

positive impact on youth
UCAN offers a continuum of healing, independence, and assistance.

At 14, Tiffany* is removed from her home because her mother cannot provide her with adequate care. UCAN’s Foster Care Program finds her a caring home and UCAN’s Counseling and Youth Development Services offers a clinical support team to address her trauma and help her heal from the effects of separation and neglect.

At 17, Tiffany is interested in becoming more independent but is unsure where to find work and save for her college education. She is connected to UCAN’s Transitional Living Program that provides her with a supervised and structured setting for developing healthy, supportive relationships and reaching self-sufficiency.

At 18, Tiffany starts to lose interest in school after learning she is pregnant. UCAN’s Teen Parenting Service Network works with her to prepare for motherhood while also learning ways she can stay engaged with her schoolwork.

This is simply one example of how UCAN’s programs are intertwined and create a network advantage for the young people and families we serve. When staff members communicate, data is shared and the bigger picture of service is understood, clients’ needs are met in an exceptional fashion. UCAN elevates services further through a commitment to diversity and inclusion and positive youth development.
At 19, Tiffany loses her cousin to gun violence. She reconnects with a UCAN therapist and is introduced to UCAN’s Phenomenal Woman program to allow her the opportunity to share her grief and heal with other young women in her community who share similar stories.

As Tiffany’s mentors begin to notice her progress and leadership skills, they offer her the opportunity to apply for a scholarship at UCAN’s Youth Leadership Awards. One of five award recipients, Tiffany meets and networks with over 500 guests at the event while gaining confidence in her potential.

At age 20, Tiffany now takes night courses alongside a full-time job and caring for her son. She knows anytime she needs a little extra support UCAN’s Alumni Services Program is available for short-term assistance with any aspect of her life after emancipation.

Over 94% of UCAN youth and families believe the agency has given them opportunities to improve their future.
UCAN helps
At age eight, Sonia* suffered multiple forms of abuse at the hands of her mother’s boyfriend. When Sonia was 12, her abuser was forced out of the household. The experience left Sonia traumatized, resentful of her mother and untrusting of others. As this trauma was left untreated, she began to act out at home and in school, finding herself in many verbal confrontations with her classmates, friends and family.

After internally dealing with her pain for a long time, Sonia gained the courage to seek help from her father. He took action to remove Sonia from her mother’s care and brought her into his home. “That is what brought me to UCAN, to get over the anger and all of the hurt I felt and to move on to be a better me,” Sonia recalled.

Sonia experienced some initial hesitation when she began receiving therapy services. She was unsure of how to open up to a therapist and how much she should share. After several sessions with her first therapist, she began to see that she was in safe place and could be honest about her experiences and feelings.

Prior to therapy, Sonia harbored intense anger that negatively impacted her relationships. “I would get mad at the smallest things. If someone would not address me in a nice way I would just start screaming and yelling. I knew my anger was pushing them away and I was thinking, ‘These are my friends and family and I don’t want to treat them like that.’ That is what I wanted to work on.”

Through therapy and self-assessment Sonia has learned how to handle hostile situations. She explained that even when she slips back into her old ways she can assess the situation better and consider how to handle it. Sonia described how working on her anger has been a huge part of her experience and growth with UCAN. Through her therapy sessions she was able to learn that she is more than what’s happened to her in the past and that she is capable of making changes for a better future.

Sonia’s therapist nominated her for UCAN’s Youth of the Month because she was impressed with her honesty, self-awareness and commitment to growth. She described her initial meetings with Sonia and how she’d made a list of different situations that made her angry and areas she wanted to work on. “I was so blown away by her intelligence, her insight and her willingness to do the work. I wanted her to be honored for that,” said Sonia’s therapist.

Although Sonia experienced significant trauma at a young age, she has been able to overcome her past and is motivated to be the best version of herself. Now a thriving high school sophomore with a passion for dance, she aspires to become a lawyer and eventually a judge.

Growing up in Chicago’s Lawndale neighborhood, 14-year-old Travis was highly aware of the dangers outside his home. After tragically losing his sister to gun violence, Travis began to experience difficulties in his relationships. Through the advice of his principal, he came to UCAN and was connected with a youth development coach and the Project Visible Man (PVM) program that provides group mentoring for young men of color ages 13-24. PVM aims to transform behavior by promoting willpower, providing positive reinforcement and real-life role models. Through therapy and PVM, Travis has been able to develop critical conflict resolution and social skills that have helped him deal more positively with adults and other youth.

While participating in PVM, Travis has connected with other young males and with mentors who have helped him think about what he wants to do and what he wants out of life. He explained that the mentors help the young men in the program push towards their goals. In addition to the group sessions, PVM provides opportunities for the young men to get outside of their community and experience a variety of activities, such as visiting museums, attending Chicago Ideas Week and going to Chicago Sky basketball games. “There are great opportunities to learn new things about other people and myself that I did not know,” said Travis. “I didn’t talk to people a lot, and when I was talking to people it was because I was mad and it was aggressive. UCAN has showed me ways to calm myself down.”

Travis said he would tell other young men to participate in PVM because of the opportunities and experience. He has also benefited from the therapy he received at UCAN, which has included a trip to the Garfield Park Conservatory, peaceful talks in the park and a bike ride along the Bloomingdale Trail. He explained that if he had not been referred to UCAN that his attitude, aggressiveness and people skills would have continued down a negative path.

During this time, Renee befriended a male classmate named Todd, and the two bonded over their troubled pasts. “We’ve been through a lot of the same stuff. We both come from families with issues but want to do better. We saw the good in each other,” explained Renee. After a few years of dating Todd, Renee learned that she was pregnant. She vowed to get her life on track and be the best parent possible to her child. However, with a lack of parental support Renee was unsure of how she would be able to properly raise her child.

In addition to the lack of support from her own family, Renee and Todd’s relationship began to deteriorate under the stress of becoming teen parents. The verbal disputes between the two began to occur more frequently, eventually leading to the end of their relationship.

Alone and afraid of raising her child without the influence of a father, Renee was referred to UCAN by her case manager. She recalled, “When I first came to UCAN, I really did not know what I was going to do. I was so scared because all I wanted to do was be a good mom but I didn’t have anyone to show me how.”

Renee started as a client in UCAN’s Teen Parenting Service Network (TPSN) program in May 2014. Along with partner agencies throughout the state and the Department of Children and Family Services, UCAN has been charged with taking a management role in providing a range of integrated resources to pregnant and parenting teens. Through UCAN’s TPSN program, Renee has developed a nurturing and positive relationship with her son.

Renee has since completed the TPSN New Birth Assessment process, Risk Reduction Training and received support from a TPSN doula who provided physical and emotional support before, during and after birth. After giving birth to her son, Renee and Todd mended their relationship and are raising their child together. Renee is currently working with a TPSN education coach, has enrolled in beauty school and has placed her son in daycare. Supported by TPSN case workers and in preparation for her future, Renee will participate in a Discharge Planning process this year before exiting the child welfare system.

Twenty-year-old Renee* experienced several challenges throughout her life including being separated from her parents since the age of 14. By age 18, Renee had been placed with three different foster families, began struggling academically and was having trouble adjusting to the rules set in her new home.

“We the people who I worked with at UCAN have really helped me. They told me a lot of things that I didn’t know and I am more confident now that I will be a great mom. They encourage me to finish beauty school and have been really supportive.”
Before coming to UCAN, 17-year-old Taffanisha experienced family difficulties that led her to run away from home. She stayed with a friend for a short period of time until that home became unsafe and Taffanisha’s life was threatened by someone in her new household. She went back to live with her mother and was removed from her care shortly thereafter, eventually finding support with a foster family.

Through these circumstances Taffanisha came to UCAN where she received therapy services and participated in the Diermeier Future Leaders Now (DFLN) and Phenomenal Woman programs. She is currently on the DFLN Youth Advisory Council.

“DFLN is a leadership program that taught us skills that we would need and what it would take to gain a job,” explained Taffanisha. She described how the program exposed her to different cultures through the food that they ate during the program. Building positive relationships with two UCAN staff members through the DFLN program has also been a highlight of her time at UCAN. “I reach out to them if I need advice or someone to talk to,” stated Taffanisha.

Through her involvement with Phenomenal Woman, Taffanisha was able to talk about everyday issues with other young women and UCAN’s youth development specialists. Elaborating on some of the other benefits of the program she stated, “We did a lot of community service hours with the program so that helped me get my service hours to graduate. I am giving back to the community and that makes me feel good inside.”

Taffanisha has been able to build relationships with youth within UCAN’s other programs. Coming to UCAN has provided her with more freedom and exposure. “I come from a background where we lived in a crime-infested neighborhood. It was hard for us to go outside and have a normal childhood. My grandmother wanted to shield us from that.” Her life has improved since coming to UCAN, including an increase in self-esteem and improved emotional well-being. “Literally, I was an emotional wreck but now I feel like I am more stable.”

“UCAN shows you what you can do. It is just a matter of putting your mind to it. What I’ve learned coming to UCAN is that my perseverance has to be high or else I will just fall. I keep my schedule busy. The people at UCAN encourage you to push to be your best and then be even better. They try to get you out of your comfort zone.”

UCAN’s journey to North Lawndale

It all began with an idea sparked by UCAN’s Board of Directors to build a new campus in North Lawndale, a community with great need and great potential.

September 2013
Our Groundbreaking Ceremony took place in the presence of over 100 supporters and elected officials.

June 2014
The foundation was laid near a beautiful view of the original Sears Tower at Fillmore Street and Central Park Boulevard.

August 2014
UCAN’s family of supporters gathered to sign a ceremonial beam hoisted into the center of our Therapeutic Youth Home.
For close to eight years, UCAN has been working on one of the largest capital projects in North Lawndale in recent memory. The Drost Harding Campus, named after prominent Chicago-area families who generously supported the project, will not only provide a structured living arrangement with its Therapeutic Youth Home for youth who have suffered trauma and neglect, but will enable UCAN to provide expanded outreach services focusing on youth leadership, violence prevention, clinical and counseling services, mentoring, case management, family support services and workforce development at its new John D. and Alexandra C. Nichols Program Center. Youth will be tracked via the Peace Hub, a collaborative violence prevention initiative led by UCAN that was launched by a five-year, $1 million commitment from the Boeing Corporation.

August 2015
UCAN staff members, donors, government supporters and alumni joined together to cut the ribbon marking the opening of our Therapeutic Youth Home.

Summer 2016
The John D. and Alexandra C. Nichols Program Center will be ready for UCAN staff members to move in summer 2016.

September 2015
UCAN’s youth moved into their new home.

"Our supporters and partners are to be congratulated for their financial commitments, resourcefulness, creativity and old-fashioned hard work. We couldn’t be prouder of this beautiful facility that will serve as a launching pad for our youth.”

—Richard Fleming, UCAN Governing Board Chairman
Historic UCAN milestones

1860’s
UCAN’s story begins in the early 1860’s at the onset of the Civil War. As men left for service, the members of St. Pauls United Church of Christ made a promise to care for the children of fallen soldiers.

1867
Mr. and Mrs. Carl Gottfried Uhlich announced the donation of a large piece of property to perpetually endow an orphanage home. In March of 1869, the Illinois Legislature approved an act to incorporate the Uhlich Evangelical Lutheran Orphan Asylum.

1871
October 8, 1871 was an unforgettable date for members of St. Pauls and the children of the orphan home, as both buildings felt the rage of the Chicago Fire. In 1872, a new home was built at Burling and Center Street which housed boys and girls for the next fifty-six years.

1924
In 1924, Pastor Pister conducted a campaign for funds to build a new home. Mr. and Mrs. Carl Buehler generously donated 10 large city lots in the 3700 block of North California Avenue and ground was broken in 1927.

1960-1990
With the establishment of the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services in 1965, Uhlich Children Home’s enrollment became almost completely that of youth in care of the state.

2004
In 2002, Uhlich Children’s Home changed its name to Uhlich Children’s Advantage Network (UCAN) to reflect the wide variety of services provided, and in 2004, UCAN merged with FamilyCare of Illinois.

TODAY
UCAN is now a multifaceted social service organization building strong youth and families through compassionate healing, education and empowerment. The meaningful programming UCAN provides meets the critical needs of Chicago’s at-risk populations.
2014/2015

Financial Highlights

UCAN is financially viable and stable, despite historically challenging economic times in Illinois. Good stewardship and an unwavering focus to secure much needed services for our young people and families is the foundation of fiscal responsibility at UCAN. We have made significant progress developing our campus in the North Lawndale community, opening our new Therapeutic Youth Home in September 2015. We are proud that 86 percent of each dollar entrusted to UCAN is spent on programs for healing, education and empowerment in Chicago’s communities.
